

SWING SACRIFICE

As she spoke she glanced at Beatrice, who was sitting in the chair, and she was trying to understand the glance; then a light broke over her face and she rose and made her way out of the court.

Olivia watched her until she disappeared, then drew a breath of relief. "Now that's that," said Mr. Edgar, when the excitement had subsided. "Did you see Mr. Bradstone last?"

"On the day of the wedding," she replied, and she gave the answer coldly. The worst had passed; there could be no doubt about that. She had already been.

"At what time?"

"Nearly four o'clock."

"You have not seen or exchanged a word with him since?"

"No."

"The crowd pressed so close as they came to the witness-box that they might not lose a word of this never-to-be-forgotten evidence."

"Do you know where he is?" asked Mr. Edgar, still with deep interest. Olivia shook her head.

"Mr. Edgar passed a moment; the light which he thought he had described seemed faded and losing his new light."

"The crowd pressed so close as they came to the witness-box that they might not lose a word of this never-to-be-forgotten evidence."

"Do you know where he is?" asked Mr. Edgar, still with deep interest. Olivia shook her head.

"Never," said Olivia.

"You received any communication from Mr. Bradstone in reference to this murder?" she asked.

"No," she replied, and all eyes were fixed upon her.

"You have," said Mr. Edgar, promptly. "I saw him in her elegant face."

"Answer, please. Remember your oath, remember that a man's life hangs by a thread."

"She cast a pensive glance at Paradise, who had risen and stood looking at her in a silent agony of sympathy. He had risen to save her husband from the hangman's hands, the convict's shame, and yet she had come to this."

"You have," said Mr. Edgar, "I saw him in her elegant face."

"I have," she replied, almost voiceless.

"What was it?" he asked.

"She uttered a piteous little cry, and drew Bradley Bradstone's letter from her pocket."

"The letter told it calmly, though his heart beat. He read it, and his face was slightly, master of it, though he was."

"Mr. Sewell was on his legs in a moment."

"I must see that letter," he said, firmly.

"I beg pardon, Mr. Judge, but the solemn voice of the judge broke in."

"You must see in the letter, Mr. Edgar, the prosecution of the jury, all of us must see it, please."

"As your lordship please," said Mr. Edgar, and he held out the letter.

"Mr. Sewell's face cleared."

"Mr. Lord," he said, "the letter is evidence, such as it is, on the left of the prosecution."

"Where is this Bradstone?" inquired the judge, sternly.

"The moment," said Mr. Edgar, "do you know if Mr. Bradstone was aware of Lord Clyde's affection?"

"Olivia's face flushed, then grew white again."

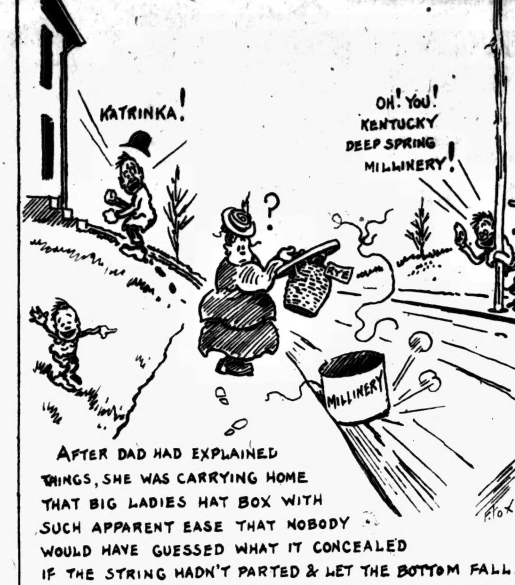

"He may have known," said Mr. Edgar, "but I cannot say."

"I cannot," he said, "and they took her back to her old seat."

"I cannot," he said, "and they took her back to her old seat."

"I cannot," he said, "and they took her back to her old seat."

"I cannot," he said, "and they took her back to her old seat."

And as he spoke he drew her toward him, and took her in his strong arms, and crushed her faintly face and shoulders against his breast, so close that he could feel the throbbing of her heart as it beat wildly and passionately against his own, could feel her hair against his face.

"Oh—oh, let me go!" she panted; but was it fancy?—she seemed to nestle closer, even as she spoke.

Nearly a year passed before Lord Clyde brought his bride back to the old home which he had made a home beautiful for her; and not only the whole population of Hawkeston and Wainford, but as it seemed, almost the whole of the country, congratulated to give them welcome.

There were the children of the "Convent" who had been with her, the "Maples," and in their midst stood a pale, but happy-faced matron. She was known to the world as Mrs. Elizabeth, and had grown so used to hear herself so called that she would scarcely have responded if some one had had to remember and called her "Beth."

She had disappeared in the excitement and confusion of Lord Clyde's wedding, and had grown so used to hear herself so called that she would scarcely have responded if some one had had to remember and called her "Beth."

FAMILY DISPUTE ENDS IN DEATH

Cookville Man Shoots His Brother-in-Law
Who Had Slapped Him in the Face.

Cookville, March 3.—Angered by having his face slapped following a family dispute, Frank Larson, a young married gentleman, aged 34, is alleged to have shot and killed his brother-in-law, James Davidson, aged 34, a farmer of this locality. The shooting took place in the kitchen of a little house outside a quarter of a mile outside the village of Cookville.

At about two hours later Dr. A. H. McFadden, of Cookville, was notified by Mrs. Larson's wife, a sister of the deceased, that her brother-in-law, who had the young man put under arrest, and subsequently the brother, with their father, were taken in custody to Brampton.

According to the story told by Cookville residents, there was no public knowledge of any bad feeling between Larson and his brother-in-law, Davidson had gone across the Larson house, where a dispute developed, and it is stated, that he crossed the room in which the younger man was sitting, and the younger man across the face. Larson went to the gun and returned to have deliberately shot Davidson, the body bearing a gunshot wound about the neck.

At three o'clock Dr. McFadden was called by Mrs. Larson, who was going to the house where the circumstances of the shooting by the brother-in-law, who is now in custody at the Cookville police station.

GRAIN TRADERS
TOOK PROFITS
Bulge in Corn and Oats
Was Goods.

Bearish Situation Seems to Be Developing.

Supplied by Tomenson, Forwood & Co., Merchants Bank Bldg.

Chicago, March 4.—Corn and oats traders who took profits on the market yesterday did so mainly on purpose of restrictions on shipments, owing to the advance of over 11 cents a bushel. They registered the technical situation as favoring a reaction of a few cents, which would place the market in position for another up move. Bearish news was ignored as cash premiums have not moved much from the country light, with cars scarce. Local bulls are buying here and selling in the south, which strengthens values here.

A few of the strongest local operators are bullish on oats and have bought freely for several days, while others are waiting for a move in the market. Needed profits are taking profits. The largest buyer of yesterday was a free seller yesterday and most of the big commission houses have oats to sell at 81 cents and over for May, and 77 cents and above for July.

A bearish situation is said to be developing around the grain markets, but has not yet developed in the market, there being no pressure of cash grains to make it a factor as traders see it.

QUOTE SCHEME
FLU IN CALIFORNIA
Is Just as Bad As in Cold Countries.

Dr. Roberts looks for the daily number of new flu cases to fall off from now on. During the past two to four hours 74 new cases and two deaths were reported, making the total to date 3,679.

Some idea of how difficult a disease the "flu" is, and how baffling it is for medical men to determine just what climatic conditions are most conducive to becoming epidemic, was evidenced in a letter which Dr. Shain received from Tom Fortson, who is in Los Angeles, Cal.

Dr. Fortson advised that, in spite of the fine, balmy weather in California, the "flu" was raging just as rampant in Los Angeles and nearby points. The mortality is appalling, and people are generally frightened. Those who succumbed to the disease, he pointed out, were mostly young, vigorous persons having the life of the "flu" was the same in California as in the cold countries. This bears out the testimony of many eminent physicians that the "flu" germ is the most malignant organism medical science has yet grappled with; it will live in cold, hot, and temperate climates, and temperate.

"Why sleep with the windows open, then?" piped one of the reporters.

"Because," explained a Board of Health official, "the germ is less deadly in fresh air than in a close, field atmosphere. By the same token, a person breathing plenty of fresh air has more resistance and, consequently, enjoys greater immunity from infection."

IT WILL COME
Controllers Confident of the Canal Scheme.

Controllers O'Neil and Juttin, who attended the largely attended conference in Buffalo, came back convinced that the proposal to canalize the St. Lawrence River at a cost of $100,000,000 to be borne jointly by Canada and the United States, will soon assume the form of a concrete project, becoming a reality than most other things.

"The impression could not escape me that the milling and shipping interests of Duluth, Chicago, Milwaukee, Port Huron, Paul and Minneapolis, which were all adequately represented, are keen to have the project go through so that the upper St. Lawrence will be made acceptable to ocean-going vessels."

Controller Juttin said that, naturally, all the opposition came into being from the representatives of Boston, New York, Buffalo, Portland, Nova Scotia, etc. They all had their own axe to grind. But the Buffalo and Montreal representatives made no attempt to conceal their fear that the project would mean the utter uselessness of the Erie Canal as a vital grain artery to the eastern seaboard.
